

Georgia has seen many changes since USAID first opened a mission here in 1992. In the 20 years since then, the American people have invested more than $1.5 billion in Georgia through USAID.

USAID-funded projects over the years have included programs to strengthen democracy and governance, stimulate sustainable and inclusive economic growth, improve education and health, enable the sustainable use of Georgia's natural resources, and provide humanitarian relief during times of crisis. The assistance provided by the American people has helped renovate schools, train nurses, increase the income of small farmers, and improve the delivery of basic services, like electricity.

As Georgia has changed over the past two decades, so have the priorities of USAID, but our overall objective has remained the same: to assist the Georgian people as they work to create a more democratic, stable, and prosperous future.
